Some Clews to the Habitat of the Despotism of Dress.

There is great need at the present mo ment of some patient and industrious philosopher who will make it his business to trace to their source the varying fashions of female dress, and to inform a long-suffering race of the secret origin of a despotism whose oppressive mandates they seem quite unable to withstand. No man who happily wears the same kind of clothes to-day that he did some thirty years ago can have the least conception of the weary tyranny exercised over the other sex by fashion. Year after year he goes to his tailor and orders a suit of clothes "to be made as usual," with a cheerful disregard of the almost imperceptible changes which may have taket place in the dress of his more fashionable ontemporaries. But with a woman the ase is far different; she must conform to be law of change, and the changes in her fress are as strongly marked as they are

During the last two or three weeks we have been treated to a striking illustra-tion of the utter helplessness of womankind in the matter of fashion. A rumor was recently started to the effect that an attempt would shortly be made to reintroduce the crinoline. It would appear, from the letters that appeared in all the newspapers, that the wearers of petticoats were unanimous in their condemna-tion of the hateful contrivance, and one might reasonably have expected that they would have been contented with that ex-pression of their feelings, and have as-sured themselves that their milliners and dressmakers would speedily renounce an idea which was so evidently distasteful to their customers.

The comfortable assurance, however, was very far from their thoughts. They have not the slightest confidence in the weight of their wishes, and firmly believe weight of their wishes, and firmly believe that, whether they desire it or not, they will have to wear a crinoline—if only fushion bids them. Who is Fashion? What is she that all women should obey her? They frankly confess that they do not know. When one considers how blindly and implicitly they have obeyed er every whim for years-nay, for cen-uries surely the confession should be a shout the leaders of fashion; now we carn that those powerful personages are more or less mythical. Through the mouth of Sir Henry Ponsonby we hear that her gracious Majesty does not con-der that fashion is a subject upon which she can give an opinion, and a like answer has been received from the Princess of Wales. Evidently, therefore, the leaders of fashion are not to be found in the precincts of the court, or, we may also precincts of the court, or, we may also suppose, among the great ladies of so-ciety. Common report assigns some of the most startling changes in woman's attire to Paris. In the days of the Second Empire there was, without doubt, a good leal of reason for imagining that our fashions came from our neighbors across the channel, and that the French stage, controlled to a certain extent by the court of the Tuilleries, was responsible for each fresh innovation. To-day we do not fancy that our French To-day we do not fancy that our French neighbors are more disposed to lead us than to follow us; at any rate, they themselves no longer possess a supreme arbiter of fashion, and, as far as one can judge, are every whit as much at the mercy of some unknown inventor as we are ourselves. Who is it, then, who is responsi-ble for the constantly varying modes of yomen's frocks? Some one must inventhem; and it must also be some one who has power to enforce the adoption of his invention, for, whether it be ugly or not, to his dictation. One is almost disposed to believe in the fanciful theory put forward by the lady who has been most eloquent on the side of the "No Crinoline League." Woman's fashions, she says, are not due to the inwention of woman; they emanate from "a small clique of men;" an unscrupulous council composed partly of manufacturers and partly of dressmakers, who play into each other's hands; in which case, of ourse, the introduction of the crinoline s easily explained. Supposing that ady's skirt contains so many yards, the se of crinoline would swell it to three mes its cize. The manufacturers would imes its cize. ell three times the amount of material sell three times the amount of material, and the dressmaker would, of course, profit equally with the manufacturer. Our own explanation of the mystery is a more simple, though, we must confess, a less satisfactory one. In the first place, ve believe there is no ruling mind, no sys tem of deliberate invention or choice at all. The leading dressmakers of London and Paris find their advantages in varyand Paris lind their advantages in their designs as frequently as possible; wherever a novelty achieves any success, whether it be in London or in Paris, it is immediately copied by other dressmakers, and its general adoption is as rapid as that of a slang word. Equally rapid is its course toward exaggeration; its salient features are further and fur-ther enlarged, until the exaggeration bemes grotesque, the reaction sets in,

ANNIVERSARY OF APPOMATTOX.

Twenty-Eight Years Ago To-Day Lee Sur rendered to Overwhelming Numbers.

Twenty-eight years ago to-day Robert E. Lee surrendered his hungry, ragged, but brave and gallant band of warriors to an overwhelming force of Federal soldiers at Appomattox. No one who was present on that occasion fails to recall this anniversary or needs to be told how the boys in gray sorrowered and wept as they laid down their arms and bade adieu to the great man whom they loved so well, and at whose bidding they had so often swept fields of glory. That was the darkest of dark days that had ever come to the beloved South. They had risked all and lost all save

The Case Again Postponed.

The case of R. E. Johnston was called The case of R. E. Johnston was called in the hustings court before Judge Witt yesterday morning. The accused was present, accompanied by his mother, sis-ter and brother and several personal friends. His counsel, Major Robert Stiles and Mr. D. C. Richardson, were also on

When the indictment was read by the clerk, which charged the accused with stealing a full dress suit and a pair of pants of the value of $25, it was discovered that the word "pasts" had been spelled "pats." The indictment, therefore, became void, and the young man will again have to appear before the grand jury at the May term. He was bailed for his appearance in the sum of $300, his brother, Major Stiles and Mr. Richardson becoming his bondsmen.

This is the second postponement which has become necessary. When the case was first called on March 15th, the defendant was ready, but the Commonwealth asked for a postponement, which was, of course, granted. Again yesterday a postponement became necessary, although unsel for the defense were very anxious o go on with the case. At both times the defendant had to go to a great deal of expense, for several witnesses came all the way from West Virginia and one from Washington.

The erronecus indictment was drawn by Mr. Sam Page during the recent illness of Commonwealth's Attorney Spotswood.
